PARIS, June 29—Baron David de Rothschild of the Paris banking family and Miss Olimpia Aldobrandini of Venice were married today in a civil ceremony presided over by the bridegroom's mother, acting in her capacity as Mayor.

Baroness Alix de Rothschild is serving her third term as Mayor of the village of Reux, population 229, on the outskirts of Pont l'Eveque, seven miles southeast of the resort town of Deauville.

The population of the Normandy village was easily doubled by guests and journalists who came to the wedding of the eldest son of Baron Guy, de Rothschild, head of the French branch of the banking family, and the daughter of Don Francesco and Donna Maria Aldobrandini of an old Italian noble family.

A large tent was pitched outside the tiny country mairie, or Town Hall, to shelter the members of the wedding from the frequent rains that are an integral part of life in green, coastal Normandy.

The family had been at pains to maintain the "private character" of the civil ceremony, and a spokesman at Reux said "only members of both families and anti hate friends" would attend. Journalists had been politely but firmly discouraged. No religious ceremony was planned.

The bridegroom is reported to have said that his wife would remain Roman Catholic and he would remain Jewish, but that they planned to raise their children in the Jewish faith.

Among the guests were members of the French, American and British branches of the Rothschild family and friends of the bride, whose father is chairman of an important Italian insurance firm. Also attending was the Paris fashion designer Yves Saint-Laurent, who designed the bride's orange-blossom-embroidered, white organza dress. She had orange blossoms in her hair.

The tall, elegant, darkhaired Italian bride attended the Lycee Victor Durruy in Paris, where her interests were in literature. A former classmate described her as "very intelligent."

David de Rothschild, 31 years old, is working at the Rothschild-Paris Bank, of which his father is president. The Baron is also chairman or member of the board of a large number of banking, securities, mining and other corporations in Paris, London, New York, Toronto and elsewhere. Baroness Alix and Baron Guy are divorced, but she has been allowed to retain the title. He is now remarried.

After the midday ceremony at the Town Hall, which also houses the small rural community's school refectory, the guests attended a lunch at the 15th-century chateau of Reux, which belongs to the baroness, the former Alix Schey de Koromla. A larger reception was held later in the day, at the chateau.
